

War on Drugs:

End the nearly 50-year war on drugs, it has failed, while costing billions of tax payer dollars. It's been ineffective at reducing drug use, addiction, & overdose, and fueled black markets that enrich criminal organizations, encourage more dangerous drug use, and leads to violence and instability. The only winners with prohibition are the cartels.

We have individual autonomy and the right to make choices about one's own body. This war infringes upon fundamental rights by dictating what substances individuals can or can't consume. Finally, ending the war on drugs would allow law enforcement to focus on violent crimes, protecting individuals and property, rather than focusing on non-violent drug offenses. At the very least this should be removed from federal law and allow states and communities to define the solutions (nullification). Allow a medical and educational approach where private entities, communities, religious organizations, families, & individuals effectively & humanely resolve these issues.
